PREFACE

We spent two years collecting, sifting, and organizing data in order to publish the proof edition of Paulist Chronicles in 1988. Conscious that there would be mistakes and omissions, we encouraged feedback from the community. We gratefully acknowledge and thank all those who sent corrections, additions, and pictures.

We then spent another two years re-checking sources, trying to resolve conflicting dates, and collecting additional pictures. We discovered several new sources of data: diocesan archives, articles and books by or about Paulists who left, and old newspaper clippings.

This edition of Paulist Chronicles has the most complete set of Paulist pictures ever assembled. We're only missing 15 of the 605 men who took final promises as a Paulist. This has been a labor of love - we appreciate those who have contributed information, pictures, money, and time to this project, especially Paulist archivist REDACTED REDACTED and REDACTED, without whose help this volume would not be possible. We'd also like to thank the many Paulists and former Paulists for your encouragement and support.

Paulist 2nd Chronicles

First Edition

The historical record of a religious community is created by the day to day work of its members. The official assignments of the community provide valuable information about the context in which individual Paulists are doing this work. For the past two years we have undertaken the task of creating a list of Paulist assignments. Compiling the information turned out to be a monumental task. This book is a first attempt.

We have striven for accuracy and would like your feedback on any errors you find. The record is fairly complete from 1960 to the present. Before 1960 we made no attempt at completeness. In the future some other Paulists might look up the information in various community files and in The Paulists, 1958-1970 by REDACTED and come up with a second edition of 2nd Chronicles.

We would like to thank all Paulists who have contributed their recollections and written records to this work, especially REDACTED and REDACTED.

The first section, Paulist Assignments, is an alphabetic list of all ordained Paulists and their assignments as we know them. The number following their name is their seniority number. Each line of assignment information includes beginning and ending date, city, name of the foundation, and their position.

The second section, Paulist Foundations, presents the same information as the first section, cross-referenced by foundation. Paulist foundations are listed alphabetically. The beginning year is given for each foundation and, where appropriate, the ending year is given. Each line of information includes beginning and ending dates, the name of the individual Paulist, and his position.

itions Raymond Jack helps demonstrate decontamination posed to a chemical or biological attack.

Jack's clothes were placed in a plastic bag, and he was given a plastic wristband with an identification tag.

A firefighter wearing a hooded plastic suit, rubber boots and gloves and an oxygen tank greeted Jack at the tent's entrance and hosed him down with a retractable nozzle. Jack proceeded along the right side of the red, green and white tent, aside for men. The left side is designated for women and those who could not walk on their own.

Next, Jack stepped into a brightly lit tent in the middle of the site, where two similarly attired firefighters hosed him down again and used a broom to scrub his skin. Contaminated water ran under the tent where Jack stood and was pumped out of the tent.

into a 600-gallon bladder. When Jack emerged from the tent he was given a baby blue paper suit and yellow booties.

"I didn't know if I should bring shampoo and my rubber ducky," Jack said after he changed back into his track suit. "It's no different than being in a big locker room shower."

The firefighters who operate the units work with the city's three hazardous-materials teams, relying on a variety of sensors and monitors to detect minute concentrations of nuclear, biological or chemical contaminants.

The units can also be used outside the airport, and were sent to Sunday's Academy Awards ceremony and to the 2000 Democratic National Convention in Los Angeles.

could foul the waters of Southern California's last pristine river, supervisors directed their planning staff to draw up final environmental documents that they could formally approve in May.

It is the second time Los Angeles supervisors have backed the Newhall project, consisting of 21,600 homes on 12,000 acres straddling the Santa Clara River in the northwest corner of the county.

After the initial approval in 1999, Ventura County and environmental groups sued to block the development. A Kern County judge ruled that the environmental documents needed to be rewritten to address whether there is enough water available, among other matters.

The rewritten documents were on the table Tuesday, with Newhall contending it had found additional water supplies for the 70,000 people expected to live in the development.

Despite giving initial approval to the project, supervisors registered concern about Newhall's alleged failure to disclose the full number of San Fernando Valley spineflowers on its land. The district attorney's office recently settled a probe into the matter by requiring Newhall to set aside a 64-acre spineflower preserve.

Supervisor Zev Yaroslavsky said the incident has made him reconsider his initial support for Newhall. "I'm always troubled when a developer doesn't level with us," said Yaroslavsky, adding that he was reconsidering a previous vote in support of Newhall.

Yaroslavsky asked that Newhall allow supervisors and county staff to inspect all of the documents prepared by its consultants, who had searched the site for endangered species. The developer, which contends it has been forthright about the spineflower, quickly agreed.

Then Yaroslavsky, who had also proposed that 1,100 new acres of Newhall land in Ventura County be preserved as part of the deal, abstained from the 4-0 vote that directed county staff to prepare the project's approval. Supervisor Mike Antonovich, in whose district the Newhall project is located, had already formally scaled back the project by 730 homes to make room for the initial 64-acre spineflower preserve.

In hours of testimony, supporters of the project argued it would create critically needed housing and jobs while opponents labeled it poorly planned sprawl that would sap water supplies.

3 Accused of Molesting Altar Boys

By ERIC MALNIC
Times Staff Writer

Child molestation charges were filed Tuesday against two former priests and a seminarian, and arrest warrants were issued for all three, the Los Angeles County district attorney's office said.

The charges against Lawrence Joseph Lovell, 55, and Thomas Marshall, 74, raise to eight the number of former priests charged in molestation cases by the district attorney's office.

Lovell, a former youth pastor in charge of altar boys at San Gabriel Mission, is accused of lewd acts involving four boys under the age of 14 between 1980 and 1984. Removed from the ministry in 1986 after his conviction that year in another child molestation case, he has been working at a mental health center in New Mexico.

Marshall is charged with lewd acts involving two altar boys, 11 and 13, at St. Paul the Apostle Church in West Los Angeles. Prosecutors said the incidents occurred between 1959 and 1963, while Marshall was a priest at the church.

Marshall is retired and living in Toronto.

The former seminarian, Amado Pena, is accused of molesting two 14-year-old altar boys between 1980 and 1982 at Santa Teresita Church in Boyle Heights.

Pena, 51, was a seminary student at the church when the incidents allegedly occurred but left before becoming a priest, prosecutors said.

He is believed to be living in New Jersey, the district attorney's office said.

Prosecutors said that, if convicted, Lovell faces up to 15 years in state prison, Marshall up to life imprisonment and Pena up to eight years.
